

Flagging for Promotion

The Societies regularly promote the work of their authors via their blogs, magazines, podcast, social media accounts, newsletters, and other channels. If you find a paper that you feel is worthy of promotion, please flag it for promotion.

To flag a paper, first scroll to the flags at the bottom of the manuscript information tab. Check the gray circle with the checkmark “flag for promotion” flag and hit save. The flag will show up at the top of the manuscript.

When you make your recommendation, you will see a section regarding whether the article should be promoted and why. Please fill out this section as applicable before you submit your recommendation.

Flag for Promotion

req Should this manuscript be flagged for promotion?

Yes

No

If yes, please select the appropriate audience below:

Promote to the general public

Promote to the scientific community

Please provide a brief statement indicating why this article should be promoted:

Please be as specific as possible, including, if applicable, why you think the article is worth promoting and any audiences you think might be interested (ex: researchers, general public, industry, etc.).

Once your comments are submitted, science communication editors, editors, and headquarters staff review them for articles to promote.